OTTO JUDICKE

Otto was raised in Rutherford, New Jersey, in the shadow of Giants Stadium, to parents who owned a family bakery for many years. Along with his brother, Paul, Otto spent years playing pickup sports and table top games with a group of friends who continue to connect once a year. Otto attended Vassar College where he majored in economics, joining the volleyball team as a walk-on.

Quickly, Otto realized economics was not for him and after some recalibration he went to graduate school at Florida Institute of Technology in order to study psychology. Thirty-two years later, Otto continues as a neuropsychologist and it was while working at New England Rehabilitation Hospital in an outpatient brain injury program that Otto met his wife, Sandra Suduikis. Several years later, Katrina, now a sophomore at Colgate University, joined the family.

Interests include hiking in the Whites (favorite hikes include Mts. Major, Chocorua and Lafayette) and once a year Otto will buy a new pair of running shoes so he can train for a halfmarathon (next up is a race in New Orleans). Other pursuits include some travel, low stakes Texas hold-em, current events, certain local sports and the occasional book (recent enjoyable reads include A Stranger in the Woods, Hillbilly Elegy and The History of Love).

Otto and Sandra were looking for a church 15 years ago and upon venturing inside for a Sunday service they were instantly captivated by TriCon's message, leadership, membership and the physical charm of this New England church. Since then, Otto has been involved in several church committees and activities have included Sunday School teacher, confirmand mentor and Anchor Group participant. Otto has received many blessings and he is very grateful.
